Mercy Health drives operational, cost improvements with analytics

To identify opportunities and drive change, Mercy Health in Cincinnati produces a robust monthly analytics report that features measures the system wants to improve and sends it to all employees.

“Our organization does a good job of monitoring cost and variation in practice across our facilities,” says REBECCA SYKES, senior vice president of resource management and chief information officer. “Where we see variation, we start asking a lot of questions.”

Blood utilization is an example of how analytics can drive operational and cost improvements. As the operational team looked at costs related to blood, they noted that some hospitals had low costs while others had higher costs. The group found that physicians were in the habit of ordering two units of blood every time they placed an order, even though research says patients typically need one. By adding a new protocol and order set in the electronic health record to default to one unit, physicians had to make a physical change to go against the default. That change led to $8 million in captured efficiencies. — SUZANNA HOPPSZALLERN ●

Carolinas HealthCare uses technology to partner with patients

Making it easier for patients to receive care from providers is a central focus of the team at Carolinas HealthCare System in Charlotte, N.C. “It’s why we started on-demand video visits several years ago. Geographic boundaries are removed, and the patient becomes the location of service, not necessarily a building or office,” says CRAIG RICHARDVILLE, senior vice president and chief information and analytics officer. “Patients are measuring us against the immediacy and accuracy of other services.”

To allow patients to be true partners in their care and maintaining their health, Carolinas provides tools that give patients access to both their health information and to providers — including schedules, lab tests and radiology reports, physician notes, and secure messaging. Beyond openness in providing information to patients, providers stay connected between visits. Richardville says: “We’re implementing an active patient-generated data strategy and a population health strategy. We know that what happens in between visits is just as important as what happens in the visit.” — SUZANNA HOPPSZALLERN ●

The 2017 Innovator Awards

WINNERS:

UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI HEALTH CARE | Columbia
Program: The MoodTrek smartphone app allows patients to securely track their mood, activity and sleep, and to journal information in an electronic health record-integrated display.

LEHIGH VALLEY HEALTH NETWORK | Allentown, Pa.
Program: The Huddle Dashboard is an EHR-integrated platform that collates tables and graphs of key hospital performance indicators in real time.

KALEIDA HEALTH | Buffalo, N.Y.
Program: The Find Your Way feature on the hospital's mobile app helps visitors to navigate the facility with floor maps, walking directions and blue-dot functionality using a Bluetooth beacon infrastructure.

FINALISTS:

MOSAIC LIFE CARE | St. Joseph, Mo.
Program: The Patient Portal is an integrated solution that allows patients to securely review their EHRs from any device and contribute to their own records.

NATIONWIDE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL | Columbus, Ohio
Program: Voxel Bay distracts pediatric patients during needle-related procedures using an immersive and hands-free virtual reality ecosystem designed specifically to address the unique requirements of a clinical setting.

CENTRASTATE HEALTHCARE SYSTEM | Freehold, N.J.
Program: A wireless bar-coding scanning solution for the operating room automates processes and relieves staff from manual processes.

Additional coverage of the Most Wired Innovator Award will appear in the August issue of H&HN.

The Most Wired Advanced

These organizations met the criteria for "Advanced" in all areas of the Most Wired survey. Infrastructure criteria include stronger security systems with frequent security audits, assessments and exercises, and faster disaster recovery. Business intelligence tools are in use to improve business processes, clinical quality and patient safety. Electronic evidence-based order sets and plan of care as well as automated review of quality indicators with compliance alerts enable standardization of care. Connections with patients are ongoing as needed with secure messaging, advanced portal functions, home monitoring for chronic conditions and telehealth services. Analytics and tools support data-driven care and population health management.
